【授業の概要・目的】
Human Geography is the study of how human systems are distributed spatially across the globe, how they interact with their natural environment and how people move and communicate within them. We are in an age of globalization, but we must pay attention to regionalization and localization, as well, as people, resources, money, power, words and ideas move around the world in a multitude of ways. Some have argued that geography is dead, but in this class we will explore the question from two angles: how geography influences human actions, and how society has continuously adapted to accommodate geographic constraints. We will examine not only the spatial elements of these global issues, but also the constant interplay between the local, national, regional and global.
【到達目標】
The goal of this course is to familiarize ourselves with the basic concepts of Human Geography in the context of globalization. By the end of the course, we will have developed analytical skills and nuanced perspectives for examining the global issues that affect us locally.
