This course guides graduate students on how to act responsibly when performing, presenting, and publishing scientific research. Topics include data sharing, authorship, intellectual property, conflicts of interest, scientific misconduct, and the proper use of research funds. Representative case studies covering issues in ethics and research integrity are presented and discussed. The lectures are complemented by additional group work and in-class discussion.

[到達目標]

Over three lectures, graduate students will learn how to make responsible decisions as a researcher working in the field of physical science. An e-learning course on research ethics and research integrity will check your understanding.
