[授業の概要・目的]
This course will offer an introduction to premodern Japanese history (~1600) from a global perspective. That is, we will approach the Japanese archipelago not as an isolated territory that seamlessly transformed into the nation state as we now know it, but as a geographical hub that has been shaped by various “ foreign ” encounters through the centuries. We will look at how trade, war, diplomacy and ideas fostered international connections that have played crucial roles in deciding the trajectory of Japan ’ s development.
[到達目標]
Upon the successful completion of this course, students will: (1) have a general understanding of the major periods and events of Japanese premodern history. (2) gain a sensibility for the way in which the history of nation states is intimately bound up with, and cannot be told separately from global events.
