【授業の概要・目的】
The aim of this course is to reflect upon the defining nature and characteristics of Law, as well as its sociological and ethical dimensions, by analyzing the main theoretical approaches developed throughout history. What is this thing that we call Law? Is Law a universal element present in all societies or is it a historical product of certain cultures? How does Law relate to other normative systems like morality or politics? How does Law regulate the behavior of human beings? How does law relate to justice and stability? Such questions will be addressed in this lecture, drawing from both classical and contemporary sources.
