[授業の概要・目的]

This course critically examines the core processes shaping contemporary globalization. How can we navigate life on a planet undergoing rapid and irreversible changes across multiple scales?
Focusing on the Asia-Pacific, Southeast Asia, and other global regions, this seminar-based course explores how globalization at a planetary level is transforming our lives. Through discussions and analysis, we will raise key questions about the profound impacts of globalization and how they reshape our world.

[到達目標]

This course is designed to explore how global processes shape our economy, environment, politics, and society. Each week, we ’ll begin with a short lecture based on assigned readings and class notes, followed by engaging class discussions and interactive group exercises.

The goal is to help students develop a critical understanding of how global issues and processes affect everyday life, both in the present and the future. Students will also learn to think about different ways we measure and assess global challenges that impact them.
