[授業の概要・目的]

This course explores how societies respond to disasters through memory-making, cultural practices, social resilience, and reconstruction. Drawing on anthropology, heritage studies, and disaster research, we will examine how individuals and communities cope with disruption, maintain ties to place, and create meaning through memorials, museums, storytelling, and rituals.
This course is designed to complement Disaster and Culture (1st semester) but can also be taken independently.

[到達目標]

Students will:
- Understand core concepts related to post-disaster recovery (such as resilience, place attachment, etc.)
- Analyze the role of social and cultural components in reconstruction, recovery and resilience.
- Discuss how memory and commemoration shape collective understandings of disaster.
- Evaluate the function and ethics of museums, memorials, and public history in post-disaster contexts.
- Develop critical perspectives through global case studies.
